Presentation

This doctoral program offers a space for advanced training in the field of studies on demographic ageing and longevity through the scientific lens of Social Sciences. It appears, in this sense, as a cycle of studies that aggregates different disciplinary areas, seeking to capitalize on their similarities, but also on their differences, in an approach focused on the complementarities that are assumed as founders for the understanding of a multidimensional phenomenon such as demographic ageing and longevity.

This is a study program that will align with the most demanding practices at an international level in the field of advanced training, with the aim of asserting itself as a reference program at the Iberian level in the field of studies on ageing.

Access requirements:

- a) Holders of a master's degree (which, cumulatively with the graduation degree, must make up a minimum of 300 ECTS) or legal equivalent in disciplinary areas in the field of Social and Behavioral Sciences;
- b) Holders of academic degrees equivalent to those mentioned in the previous paragraph, organized in accordance with the principles of the Bologna Process, and awarded by a higher education institution in a State adhering to this Process.
